Forgotten Books, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Excerpt from Oregon Agricultural College In these departments competent instructors to the number of ten, some of whom have won national distinction for pioneering service in their respective fields of work, are training students in the elements of those sciences that are taking a splendid grip on the problems of industrial and rural life. Rural organizations, rural credit, marketing, secretarial duties, expert accounting, and stenographic skill - these are all fields that are alive with promise, and keen in their call for youths of character and power. Courses in Engineering, which have always been a prominent feature of the combined Federal-State institutions, coordinate with courses in Agriculture and developing parallel with them, have for many years been a strong factor in the growth and usefulness of the College. The School of Engineering, in fact, has enlarged its field of study and intensified its opportunities for specialization as rapidly as the needs of the Pacific Northwest would warrant. Civil, Electrical, and Mechanical Engineering have been substantial fields of study at the College for many years, maintaining a high standard of scholarship and professional efficiency. Highway Engineering, a profession that has come into unusual prominence all over the country in recent years, is not only adequately established at the College, but because of the peculiar demand for highway work in a state where the rainfall is periodic as it is in Oregon, is making an aggressive and dynamic campaign for state-wide service in this field. Irrigation Engineering, including hydraulics, is still another field in which the College has received the call to do constructive service, a call that it is meeting by offering complete courses in this work under...
