Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Domestic Manners of the Americans: Or, Characteristic Sketches of the People of the United States National Sensitiveness. - The Americans are fond of assuring travellers that all they want on account of their country and themselves is fair play; that they court scrutiny, so that it is reported without flippancy or scurrility; but whenever the reply to their frequent question of what do ye think of us upon the whole, is not unmingled praise, it is easy to perceive that they are dissatisfied and disappointed. The British traveller is, especially, annoyed by the absurd vanity, as, the Americans are particularly sensitive to the opinion entertained of them by the British, and appear to care far less for what mere foreigners think of them. The Americans are very adroit in seizing on every circumstance in the least available for self-laudation. One day I happened to mention to a lady how much I had been amused by observing the stage-coach drivers, managing their horses so much more by words than by the whip. O yes, Sir, said she, the circumstance is interesting, as showing intelligence in our men, and sagacity in the animals. I smiled at this curious interchange of human wisdom and brute sagacity, but the lady, not satisfied with the expression of my countenance, tired up and answered my smile by asking If I did not think the people of America, upon the whole, remarkably intelligent. - Captain Hall.
