The employment of the police was sanctioned by law, and has not been productive of any additional expense. The Governor much regrets that, owing to circumstances beyond his control, he has been obliged to retain some of them in Basutoland for many months; but he believes the Honourable Council would not wish them to be prematurely withdrawn, at the risk of renewed hostilities, at the very time when he has been endeavouring by his last communications to satisfy Her Majestys Government of the soundness of the proposed arrangements, and when the latest accounts go to show that the Basutos are rapidly evacuating the only tract about which there is still any question. The police will be withdrawn without any unnecessary delay. Government...
