Ring large bell and shake walnuts, or something similar, in a barrel. The sound of car wheels over switches may be made by successive jars of a window-sash. In imitating sounds of departing trains a snare drum may also be used. Stage set in imitation of a railway station. Window for ticket agent; candy and lunch stand; railroad maps on wall; seats or benches as near like those found in depots as can be procured. Such are often found in shoe stores. One row should be near the front for important characters. One door at left rear for outgoing and one at right rear for incoming passengers. Door at side for street entrance. Note. - In several instances one person may take two parts, thus lessening the total number of people required. A few passengers who have no special part come and...
