The year is 1950 in a parallel universe. Because the British Navy sailed (rather than remained at anchor) out of Spithead Roadstead on a crucial morning in July 1914, both World War I and II never happened. But ever since, Europe, Asia, and the US have teetered on the brink of conflict. Secretary of the Navy, Franklin D. Roosevelt, sends a Washington desk man, an agent posing as an archaeological writer, to England to uncover what the Germans (and the Japanese, the Austro-Hungarians, and the Russians) are planning. Thus begins this speculative tale of spies and adventure and chase into the British Museum, the Minoan palaces on Crete, and climaxing in a mad pursuit through the streets of Geneva. How different is the world for having been at peace Can an idea man and his beautiful assistant ferret out a dread secret weapon and prevent a world conflagration SPITHEAD occurs in a parallel world of thats slightly out of focus: Reo is a major car manufacturer; Robert A. Taft is president; FDR is the Secretary of the Navy;...
