It is known that the point A at the corner of the house B is on a true level with the cill of the window of the inn D at C: centre the telescope to that level in such a manner that the thread always cuts the same point pig. 917, when turned either way. The Spirit Level in general use, of the most convenient and improved form, has a telescope ah, supported at each end, and a spirit level below it, inclosed in a brass tube, with a piece of glass let in at the upper side, to observe the position of the air bubble: the instrument has a compass usually attached to it. By means of the socket F, and the screw below, the telescope may be raised or lowered at pleasure; on the plate M are four levelling screws, which pass through the upper plate, and by which it may be adjusted. The cross hairs in the telescope are fixed to a brass ring placed within the tube, and are kept in their position by four small screws, as seen at 00 n. The eye tube at a is to be drawn out until these hairs appear exactly in the focus of the glass, and are clearly seen. The telescope is then directed to some vertical object or piquet, and by turning the screw g it is raised or lowered to the required point. Clear and distinct vision of...
